Mission underway.

Corra Emmer has been assigned the role of Leader.
 Mychal Rennick has been assigned the role of medic.
 Xzavian Merz has been assigned the role of engineer.

If this location wasn't programmed into the ship's maps, it wouldn't have even been worth slowing down for. Sensors detect no signs of life, no obvious fuel sources, not even any obvious carbon-based material for the food replicator. It's a dead world. The precise target, however, seems to be the large moon in orbit around the planet. No more alive, but slightly more interesting.

The crew clammers up into the top of the ship and prepares the shuttle for a lunar landing. Once a trajectory is plotted, the magnetic couplings are released, and the shuttle gently eases loose from the main body of the ship in a process the crew has grimly referred to as "decapitation". Doesn't hurt you a bit, and anyway everything responsible for "you" is currently much lower on the body of the ship. You don't need a "head" to survive.

As you adjust speed and angle to keep the ship in a stable orbit, the shuttle closes in on the surface of the moon. As cameras and sensors come online, it becomes clear that this is definitely the right place, or at least an interesting one. Giant lines, many kilometers long, are carved into the lunar surface. Like the Nazca Lines on Earth, but actually visible from space. The crew can make out at least three sets of straight crossed lines with a large arc below them.

Clearly the lines are not natural. But what do they indicate? Why is this little moon, of all places, the first destination on the ship's maps? There's no logic behind it as far as you can tell. Perhaps the crew can figure it out.

Corra Emmer scratches their head a bit and starts sketching something in mid air with their finger.

"I bet it's a map of some sort," they say. "A face map. The X's that make up the eyes are angled, but the nose is straight up and down, like a plus sign. And if you draw lines from each of the X's up to where they intersect... they all point towards a fourth spot, unmarked. Right about here."

Corra Emmer runs their finger across a map on a touchscreen and taps in a spot that appears empty.

1. Explore the leftmost site
 2. Investigate the center site
 3. Check out the rightmost site
 4. Head for the unmarked site

WTF!!! No way to exit the game without hitting Ctrl-alt-delete, you HAVE to go through the flat-track FIRST before you can get to a GP bike...SAD...I'm asking for a refund. In a VR game a developer should try its best to not take control away from the player. In Almost every interlude i felt trapped, with no way to skip. Especially the way the cut scenes took away my hands, and control. This is an incredibly short game. Each chapter consisting of 2-3 puzzles. And the game revels in it's narrator, and really trying to spoon feed the player atmosphere. For me personally it felt limiting.

On another note, the characters father berating me wasn't a pleasant experience. Played off as Jovial, was REALLY uncomfortable.. Fun but a little glitchy. I found this game to be quick and easy. Easy learning curve but lacking in content, finished the game 100% in 2 hours.. The best RTSVRPG mix game, 5 great nations, full voiced singleplayer campaign, coop, AI skirmish, ranked multiplayer coming soon.. This game has it all and only for a 25 euros.

I never bought a better price value ratio game, its a must buy for people who like fantasy games.. It still has a very very long way to go, but it's not bad - Didn't play it very long as playing with only 9fps on the american server was a bit too laggy for me, but when / if this game makes more progress and re-opens it's EU server so I can play with out constant stuttering I will be back!. Excellent riddles!

However, sometimes, the controls of some contraptions feel cumbersome to use due to the camera perspective. But that's only a slight drawback.

Its basically a rip off of Space Rangers, and despite being released 10 years later than that game - it has worse graphics, fewer planets to visit, fewer quests, fewer weapons, basically its worse in every way.

Just play Space Rangers, they are selling it on GOG for like $5. Excellent project coming outa the modding community.. I first played the demo a couple months after its release on Kongregate, which was almost a year ago. I finished where the demo ended, and for the next year continued to think on and off about this game because of how damn great it was. I finished the demo on Steam again a couple days ago, and immediately bought the full version.

This game doesn't feel like it's playing itself for you—you're left to your own choices to pursue your own adventure. On the way you'll find secrets that have their own mysteries behind them that will eventually reveal themselves as you progress. I would even kind of compare it to Subnautica.

This game isn't hard, but certainly still manages to be fun. As the developer said himself, it's not "Candy Crush casual," but more like "Stardew Valley casual." This was in response to one of the four negative reviews on Steam currently. The developer responded to the two of them in which something can actually be taken away from, and he is very good on taking criticism and feedback which is something I can appreciate.

The price will be raised once this game comes out of early access, which is said to be happening around the end of 2019, so buy it now while it's cheap :0. achievements hunt only. The game is not bad at all, I enjoyed it and at .99 cents you can't beat that price. Also the Dev. is very active and very responsive.
